Happy Place

Here in Mississippi, we take our playtime very seriously. Carving out fun, we seem to understand innately, is as essential to life as eating and sleeping. That's why we've built a culture around the pastimes that bring us joy—from savoring sweet music to exploring nature's beauty.

This guide packs in all of the most exciting things to see and do in an easy-access format that divides the diversions into five regions: Hills, Delta, Pines, Capital/River and Coastal. Each expresses its own personality through topography, architecture and special events, but having fun is the thread that runs through them all.

Oh, and about those other life essentials, eating and sleeping? We just so happen to have some outstanding recommendations in those areas as well. Let's just say your tummy will be as happy as you are. And when it's time to rest your head after a hard day at play, we say why shouldn't you do it in a historic plantation home or a hip Delta hotel?

Within these pages, you'll find all the details you need to home in on your own happiness hotspots. What are you waiting for?

Let the fun begin!

Deborah and I are pleased to welcome you to Mississippi, the Magnolia State and the "Birthplace of America's Music." Mississippi is such a diverse and multifaceted place full of rich history, musical heritage, culinary delights, outdoor recreation and more. This Official Mississippi Tour Guide is your resource to explore it all and start planning your journey across the state.

From the splendor of the Hills region to the mighty Mississippi River to the sandy beaches of the Gulf Coast, Mississippi offers something for the entire family. Travel along miles of hiking and biking trails or explore beautiful state parks. Relish the sounds of blues, country or rock n' roll in the birthplace of it all. Experience the state's history by touring an antebellum home or meandering through one of our many state-of-the-art museums. Indulge in a little retail therapy at the many antique shops and cozy boutiques on a town square near you. When you're done, dine on Southern classics or one-of-a-kind entrées with a modern twist. Or celebrate a Mississippi tradition at one of the festivals or fairs happening year-round.

That's just a sample of what you can see and do in Mississippi. Whether you only have a couple of days to spend here or are planning a longer getaway, you'll leave wanting more. We enjoy life in Mississippi and want to share that experience with you. Through song, literature, food and art, Mississippians want to tell their stories and draw you into the beauty of our home.

Enjoy this Mississippi Tour Guide and start planning your visit today. Be sure to also view the latest events and newest attractions at VisitMississippi.org.

On behalf of the people of Mississippi, we are honored that you are planning to visit our state and we know that you will create new friendships and lasting memories during your trip. We are looking forward to seeing you soon!

Sincerely,

Hill Bajorit

Governor Phil Bryant

ABOUT THE COVER

Hollywood may claim her, but Sela Ward will always be a Mississippi girl at heart. The family-focused actress spends much of her downtime at her picture-perfect farm, shown here, which is just outside her hometown of Meridian. Her children, Ward says, love the fact that "life slows down" in Mississippi. Photo by Chris M. Rogers

ABOUT TOWN COVER

CATFISH ALLEY, COLUMBUS, MS

Located between Main Street and College Street, Catfish Alley was a central meeting and business district for the Columbus African-American Community in the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. Boats loaded with various items to be brought to the city would dock at the river's edge. The alley was known for the smell of delicious catfish sandwiches and the name "Catfish Alley" was born. African Americans would bring horse-drawn wagons full of vegetables and ice tubs full of large catfish into the alley. The Alley held numerous businesses on both sides of the street.

Mississippi's SELAWARD Leading Lady

BEAUTY goes far beyond skin deep for this Meridian-born actress and humanitarian.

By Kelli Bozeman

SELA WARD has spent a lifetime proving she's much more than just a pretty face. Her high-school classmates in the east-central Mississippi city of Meridian were among the first to call attention to her mesmerizing hazel eyes and chiseled cheek bones when they gave her the title of "most beautiful." Two decades later, People magazine agreed. She's graced countless covers and stolen the spotlight on the big and small screens.

But Ward's heart, it turns out, is equally lovely. Even as she has ascended into the ranks of Hollywood stardom, this belle has never forgotten her home state, using her energy and influence to return historic structures to their original beauty and helping to change the lives of children in need.

Ward's childhood memories of life in Meridian are as sweet as her easy smile. "There was lots of cane-pole fishing, swimming lessons in the lake, flag football on the neighborhood field and the annual Lakemont [neighborhood] picnic," Ward tells us. "We played outside until dark and didn't have a care in the world."

When she wasn't exploring outdoors, this oldest of four children could sometimes be found on the stage. She joined the Meridian Little Theatre's cast of "The King and I" at age 12 and soon dreamed of a life beyond her home state's borders. "When I was a child, I felt I was living in a small room and there was this big world out there just waiting for me," she told Parade in 2011. "I had such a thirst for life. I wanted that big world."

So after spending her college years at the University of Alabama, where she was crowned homecoming queen, Ward packed her bags and headed for New York City. Modeling jobs came easily, but it wasn't long before she had a new destination in mind: southern California and the lure of a life in front of a different kind of camera. She was a natural actor, and the link between her talent and her Magnolia State roots wasn't lost on her. "Mississippi has an uncanny amount of accomplished artists," she reflects. "From actors to writers to painters to musicians, there is definitely something in the water that has created such an amazingly rich, creative environment to draw from."

Ward worked regularly in film and television during the 1980s, but her breakout role came in 1991 when she was cast as free-spirited alcoholic artist Teddy on the NBC drama "Sisters." That part led to her first Emmy Award in 1994; she picked up a second Emmy in 2000 for the equally popular series "Once and Again."

Off screen, Ward was making room in her life for more than the typical Hollywood trappings. She married venture capitalist Howard Sherman in 1992, and with her future family in mind, she felt herself drawn back to the place she had sworn off decades earlier. "My roots are deeply embedded in Mississippi," she explains of her decision to acquire the 500-acre property outside Meridian that she now calls Honeysuckle Farms. "I was born and raised here, and therefore my Mississippi life is a huge part of my inner world."

Today, Ward and her husband and their two children, Austin and Anabella, return each summer for extended stays on the farm, where family and friends frequently join them for parties, scavenger hunts and sleepovers. The contrast from their everyday activities has been a welcome one for the kids in particular. "As they have grown older, they have realized that life slows down in Mississippi, and we find the joy in the simpler things," Ward tells us.

The actress's ties to her native land are so strong that she devoted her bestselling 2002 memoir, Homesick, to the subject. "So many of us have moved away from the modest place that was too small to hold our dreams, too quiet for the noise we were born to make," she wrote in the book. "Yet for all the success we may have found in the big city (or sprawling suburb), we are discovering there is a cost. We have strayed too far from the humble things that endure, and given short shrift to the rituals and traditions that give meaning and continuity to our lives."

Sela at Hope Village for Children in Meridian.

With her focus back on her home state, Ward also set her sights on giving back to the community that had nurtured her for so long. She was instrumental in the restoration of Meridian's Grand Opera House, constructed in 1890, and the nearby Weidmann's restaurant, an 1870-built downtown institution. Reopened in 2006, the theater —now the centerpiece of the Mississippi State University Riley Center for Education and Performing Arts—retains many of its original historic details and once again draws top performers, while Weidmann's makes a perfect pre- or post-performance stop for visitors.

But her most meaningful project has been the creation and growth of Hope Village for Children, a Meridian facility that provides a permanent and caring home environment for abused and abandoned children. The idea for the center was born when Ward met two young brothers at a local shelter; they had been removed from an unstable family home and were soon to be separated for foster care. "We have a lot of needs in Mississippi, especially for children," she says. "...My heart nearly broke thinking what being separated from each other would do to them, and I knew there had to be a better way."

Hope Village was founded in 2000 and now houses several such vulnerable children on a 30-acre campus, where they live in small group cottages and are provided with therapeutic services, recreation, educational help and assistance in transitioning to independent living as they grow up. In 2013, Ward hosted a benefit gala for the charity in Meridian, where she welcomed celebrity friends including Gary Sinise, Lance Bass and LeAnn Rimes, among other donors.

"The most important benefit of my celebrity status is that I can use it as a platform," she told the Mississippi Legislature in 2001. "...I am committed to helping Mississippi."

Returning to her roots doesn't mean Ward has left the spotlight, however. She was a recurring friendly face on the set of "House" for seven years, and she was actually sitting on her Mississippi farmhouse's front porch when she got a call to join the cast of "CSI: NY" in 2010. Her portrayal of DNA expert Jo Danville lasted until the show was cancelled in 2013. Most recently, she was part of the star-studded lineup in the movie Gone Girl. She is also producing two films now in production.

No matter how busy her Hollywood life gets, though, Ward knows where her heart will always lie. "... Though I'm not in the South most of the time, I am undeniably of the South," she wrote in Homesick. "Its customs and ways have shaped me as sure as the great Mississippi formed the Delta. And it is to the South I always return when I need comfort, solace and respite from the rigors of city life."

WELCOME TO BEAUTIFUL // ISSISSIOO!

• * * * WE MADE THIS GUIDE TO HELP YOU NAVIGATE THE MAGNOLIA STATE * * * * *

We've split the state into regions based on geography – Hills, Delta, Pines, Capital/River and Coastal. The cities are listed alphabetically for each region in the City Guide. Check out our suggestions and veer off the beaten path, especially if you see a roadside stand of boiled peanuts or sweet potatoes. This is just a small sampling of what Mississippi has to offer. Use this guide and check out VisitMississippi.org for more ideas. And again, we're so glad you're here.

The Delta region gets its name from the fertile land that grows picturesque fields of cotton, soybeans and rice. Dive deep into the birthplace of the Blues in Clarksdale at the Delta Blues Museum. Head to Tunica for gaming, dining and golf. Swing by Po' Monkey's Lounge in Merigold to experience an authentic Blues juke joint. Take a class at the Viking Cooking School in Greenwood. In Leland, find Kermit the Frog at the Jim Henson Museum.

TUNICA

CLARKSDALE

The Pines region is delightfully green and is known for its abundance of trees and wide open spaces. Admire the brightly painted Tennessee Williams home in Columbus and sample homemade cheese and ice cream in Starkville at Mississippi State University. See the historic 1896 carousel in Meridian with its hand-carved wooden horses. Visit the public heritage museum of the Mississippi Band of Choctaw Indians near Philadelphia.

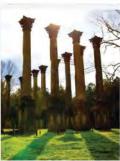

Capital/River

The Capital/River region is known for being the state's seat of government, in addition to housing genteel Southern mansions along the banks of the Mississippi River. In the Jackson metro area, you'll find local shops and innovative restaurants. Step back in time in Natchez with charming homes and colorful azaleas. Continue to learn about bygone days at Windsor Ruins and at the abandoned town of Rodney. Visit Vicksburg to see where Coca-Cola was first bottled.

Coastal

The Coastal region gets its name from miles of sandy beaches. Charter a boat and go deep sea fishing. Eat dinner in Hattiesburg and check out the nightlife. Head to Bay St. Louis, Pass Christian and Ocean Springs for brunch, shopping and art galleries. Biloxi and Gulfport have great shopping and gaming options. Children will love Lynn Meadows Discovery Center. And, hop on the ferry and check out the blue water at Ship Island.

Civil War & Trails

By Parker Hills

Anyone who travels the roads of America has become familiar with the large brown highway signs that denote sites of historical significance. Often these sites are National Military Parks—parks that are somewhat unique to the United States. The mission of the military parks is to preserve major battlefields for historical and professional study and to serve as lasting memorials for the soldiers. Fittingly, the military still makes use of these parks for the professional study of terrain, fields of fire, and most importantly, the analysis of decisions that were made. Of course, the parks have also become major tourist attractions, which accomplish the memorial portion of the military park mission.

The military parks were administered by the War Department until the National Park Service assumed control in 1933, which explains the War Department interpretive plaques on the battlefields. Today there are nine National Military Parks, including Vicksburg; eleven National Battlefields, including Tupelo; four National Battlefield Parks; and only one National Battlefield Site—Brice's Crossroads near Baldwyn. Today the National Park Service denotes no official difference in the designations.

While a visit to a military park can be a wonderful experience and is highly recommended, there are numerous other sites to visit in order to experience the thrill of discovery. After all, it is the campaign, not the battle, which is the determinant of the course of military history. It is on the campaign trail that the battle, if properly planned, is won. As the Prussian General Carl von Clausewitz wrote, all military actions should ensure that the soldier will "fight at the right time and place." Thus, the campaign trail is how the victorious troops arrived at the right place at the right time.

With that in mind, a number of initiatives by different organizations in Mississippi have resulted in campaign trails being marked, including an expedition composed largely of naval forces, but that can be followed on land. These trails provide superb field laboratories for understanding the struggles of the Civil War, to follow the footsteps of an ancestor or to enjoy the Mississippi countryside.

Steele's Bayou Expedition (March 1863): To help tell the story of the Civil War sailor, in 2008 a scenic interpretive trail was developed along the route of the Steele's Bayou Expedition. This expedition was one of the attempts that General Ulysses S. Grant called "a series of experiments" to flank Vicksburg. Even today this military operation remains as one of the boldest attempts to take an objective. Fittingly, the first marker is placed in front of the gunboat USS Cairo in Vicksburg National Military Park. From there the trail of 11 stops and seven wayside panels leads northward for 30 miles into the beautiful Mississippi Delta. It takes the visitor along the meandering routes of Steele's Bayou, Black Bayou and Deer Creek, following Admiral David Porter's gunboats and General William Sherman's infantrymen in early 1863 as they unsuccessfully sought a water route to get behind Vicksburg.

Mississippi Central Railroad Campaign (November-December 1862):

Months earlier General Grant moved southward from Grand Junction in western Tennessee in an attempt to reach Jackson, Mississippi, a scant 45 miles east of Vicksburg. If successful this movement would result in the capture of a state capital and provide much-needed positive press for a politically beleaguered Abraham Lincoln. But more importantly the capture of Jackson would force the abandonment of Vicksburg. The plan went up in smoke in late December 1862 when Confederate cavalrymen Nathan Bedford Forrest and Earl Van Dorn destroyed Grant's vital railroad line of communications in western Tennessee and his forward supply base in northern Mississippi. In 2006 Van Dorn's Raid was interpreted through a series of eight interpretive panels in Holly Springs, and in 2013 ten state historical markers were erected to interpret the entire campaign.

Grand Gulf-Raymond Scenic Byway (May 1863): In 2013 a series of 19 state historical markers and 30 directional markers were installed to interpret much of Grant's final offensive of the Vicksburg Campaign. These markers begin at Grand Gulf on the Mississippi River and follow Grant's army for 50 miles to Raymond along the Grand Gulf-Raymond Scenic Byway, a historic road, which in 2004 was named as Mississippi's first state scenic byway. Much of Grant's planning for the campaign took place at stops along this route.

Vicksburg's key position on the mighty Mississippi River sets the stage for one of the most defining episodes in American history: The Siege of Vicksburg in the Civil War. You can relive that history in our museums and tour homes and the Vicksburg National Military Park which has been named the Mississippi Tourism Attraction of the Year.

Vicksburg National Military Park Licensed Park Guides have been making history come alive at Vicksburg National Military Park since the 1950's. They offer visitors the unique opportunity to explore the battlefield with a professional guide who has excellent knowledge of civilian life and military operations of the campaign, siege, and defense of Vicksburg in the spring and summer of 1863.

THE KEY TO THE SOUTH

STATE OF THE ART

Culture is king in the state where creativity was born.

Eudora Welty once said,

"Long before i wrote stories, i listened for stories."

Even as a small child, the Jackson-born author knew that her homeland was fertile ground for folk tales and fantasy, the stuff that would later fuel her celebrated career.

What inspired Welty to create complex characters and classic novels has also sparked creative fires in a world-class who's-who of playwrights, authors, artists, musicians and other cultural visionaries. From Tennessee Williams and Jim Henson to Walter Anderson and William Faulkner, the common thread that runs through this incredible tapestry is Mississippi. Creativity, it seems, runs as freely through the veins of this state's residents as our sweet tea flows. And exploring the state's rich culture is, as Welty advised, as easy as listening for the stories.

Visual art is an appropriate place to start this cultural journey, since its stories can be told without any words at all. On the Gulf Coast, the work of the self-proclaimed "Mad Potter of Biloxi," George Ohr, is showcased like never before at the stunning Ohr-O'Keefe Museum of Art. This masterpiece of steel, glass and brick is the brainchild of architect Frank Gehry, and despite being devastated by Hurricane Katrina only months before completion, the rebuilt museum is now one of the most significant attractions in the region.

When you think of Coast artists, you can't forget Walter Anderson, the eccentric painter and naturalist who made Ocean Springs his home. Today, the Walter Anderson Museum of Art highlights not only his diverse works but also those of his brothers, potter Peter Anderson and painter and ceramist James McConnell Anderson.

The colors and clays run right up to the northern parts of the state, too. In the small Delta town of Merigold, McCarty's Pottery is an internationally recognized artist studio in an unlikely setting—an old mule barn. The distinctive look of the pieces made here by McCarty family members since the 1960s draws visitors year round to this creative oasis surrounded by colorful gardens.

Performing arts tell their own moving stories here in Mississippi. In the northeast Mississippi city of Columbus, the Tennessee Williams Tribute brings at least one of the playwright's works to life in his hometown each fall, along with a host of other related events. In Clarksdale, which also lays claim to a portion of his childhood, the Mississippi Delta Tennessee Williams Festival draws scholars, actors and fans to enjoy porch plays, table readings, monologue competitions and more.

Lovingly restored historic theaters abound all around the state, creating the perfect venues for original and touring theatrical productions. The Hattiesburg Saenger Theater, for instance, was a silent movie palace when it opened in 1929; today its still-elegant architectural details make a picture-perfect backdrop for fresh performances. In Meridian, the old Grand Opera House is now home to the Mississippi State University Riley Center for Education and Performing Arts and routinely brings in big-name acts from Buddy Guy to Randy Newman.

The world of dance has come to find its own home in Mississippi. Since 1979, the city of Jackson has been home to the USA International Ballet Competition, which welcomes dancers from dozens of countries to show their diverse choreography in an Olympic-style contest every four years. "The USA IBC is synonymous with the discovery of new talents and the launching of careers," said competition Executive Director Sue Lobrano at the start of the 2014 event. "Dancers invited to participate in the USA IBC know they have a chance to test their skills against the highest international standards."

From the page to the stage to the screen, Mississippi is also a hotbed for some of Hollywood's hottest movies. As it turns out, films have been made in this state since 1916, but there's never been a better time to be a film buff in the Magnolia State than right now, when incentives and infrastructure are attracting more and more high-profile projects to shoot within our borders. Films like A Time to Kill, O Brother, Where Art Thou? and The Help are some of the most recognizable to make use of our unique locations, but many more blockbuster and indie movie projects are on the box-office horizon.

The members of Mississippi's culture club are so many that a new attraction will soon be built to celebrate them all. The Mississippi Arts and Entertainment Center, slated to open in Meridian in 2017, promises hands-on exhibits and a Hall of Fame. Stars are already lining a Walk of Fame that will eventually lead right to its doors. But even before those doors swing open, Mississippi's creative stories continue to be told.

Like Welty said, all you have to do is listen.

STAY AWHILE. YOU'LL GET IT.

We like to make sure you're having a good time from sun up to sun up. And honestly, that's not hard to do when you have options like unwinding along our 62 miles of gorgeous coastline, upping your game on one of our signature golf courses, or shopping followed by, well, you know, more shopping.

Here, we're always up for something new. Whether it's trying your first oyster, finding balance on your paddleboard, catching your dinner, checking out a local art show, or getting lucky at one of our dozen casinos. Heck, you might even find yourself in a blues joint not feeling so blue after all. The only thing you'll be wondering when you leave is, when can I come back?

Everything you need to plan your perfect vacation is waiting for you on GulfCoast.org. So visit today, get to plannin', and we'll be waiting for you when you get here.

A PATH WELL TRAVELED

BY WALT GRAYSON

The Indian Mounds were always there like the courthouse downtown on Washington Avenue, or church or school or aunts and uncles. They were just in the background of growing up. I don't know when I became consciously aware of them.

The Winterville Mounds are just a few miles north of Greenville on Highway 1. They are within bike riding distance of where I grew up on North Broadway. But it was always more fun to get somebody's daddy to take a car-load of us out on Sunday afternoon, each with a piece of cardboard large enough to sit on, so we could climb to the top of the big mound and then slide back down. It was a long hike up the steep winding path. But the trip back down was almost instantaneous. My first flight happened on a cardboard flying carpet zipping down the big mound at Winterville.

Since then the mounds have been turned into a state park and sliding is no longer permitted. But I've about outgrown that stage of my life, anyway. And I find the museum that is there now a lot more interesting than sliding.

The only set of mounds still in use when European explorers arrived in America is preserved in another Mississippi city. The Grand Village of the Natchez Indians is on St. Catherine Creek in Natchez. Pretty much what scant information we know about actual mound usage was gleaned from the journals of the French explorers who came upon the Natchez tribe at their Grand Village in the late 1700s.

Another mound once used by the Natchez, which had already been abandoned by the time of the explorers, is huge Emerald Mound north of the city just off of the Natchez Trace. The base mound covers about eight acres and is about forty feet tall. On top, at one end rises a smaller mound and on the other end a taller mound with a large flat field in between.

I proposed one of my "three second" archeological theories about the use of the smaller and larger mounds while I was shooting a television feature at Emerald Mound with some real archeologists. They were debating whether the temple was located on the smaller rise and the priest's house on the larger, or whether the temple was on the larger and perhaps the chief had his house on the smaller. I told them they had it all wrong. The "visitors" sat on the smaller mound and the "home team" on the larger and they played the game on the field in between. The professionals looked at me about three seconds (hence my "three second" theory) before resuming their previous conversation.

I mentioned the Natchez Trace. The modern roadway running southwest to the northeast across Mississippi ending near Nashville, Tennessee follows trails perhaps begun by Native Americans hunting deer and buffalo. We don't have buffalo in Mississippi anymore. Although we do have a few places named for where they once roamed. Plenty of deer, however. Enough that you need to be careful around dusk dark driving the Trace.

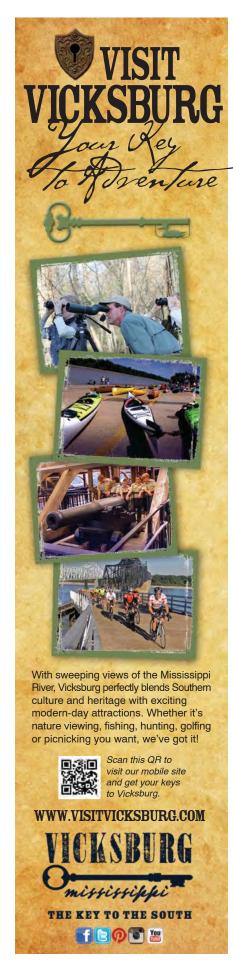

Speaking of trails, there are a bunch of interesting wilderness hiking trails in the state. One of my favorites is the Clark Creek Natural Area, the other side of Woodville in Wilkinson County way down southwest. On this primitive trail of several miles are at least seven waterfalls. Growing up in the flat Delta, I had no idea that water even ran fast in Mississippi much less fell.

The parking lot at Clark Creek is around 400 feet above sea level. You hike in about a half-mile, dropping about 200 feet at the same time to get to the first waterfall. The second is downstream maybe a hundred yards. And the subsequent waterfalls are on feeder creeks flowing into the main creek from the bluffs above.

It is a steep hike out of Clark Creek. I was loaded down with TV equipment huffing and puffing my way up when I stopped at one of the merciful benches placed along the path, to take my pulse. "One hundred sixty," I said out loud. An elderly man and his wife were also walking out. He paused and checked his pulse. "Sixty eight," he remarked. "Sixty eight," I answered in disbelief. "How do you manage to keep your heart rate so low on such a tough climb?" He patted his chest a couple of times and answered, "Pacemaker."

Dunn's Falls on I-59 south of Meridian is another pretty waterfall with a level sidewalk leading to it from the parking lot. And the Owens Creek fall on the Natchez Trace near the Rocky Springs footpath is actually right beside the parking lot.

Pretty much every national forest and state park in Mississippi has hiking trails of varying degrees of difficulty, as well as biking trails and horse riding trails. Tishomingo State Park in the northeast even has rock climbing as well as hiking.

And I certainly don't want to forget our waterways. An avid fishing cousin of mine (who would better know these things than I) told me that no matter where you are in Mississippi you are no more than about twenty minutes away from a good fishing lake. And I might add, some of the BEST fishing lakes in the nation are in Mississippi. Just follow the boat trailers.

And we have some of the most fun canoeing and kayaking streams, too. From the awe inspiring, still-natural Pascagoula River system in the southeast, to places like the fun Okatoma Creek in the central part of the state to a real ride on the Mississippi River with the professional Quapaw Canoe Company in Clarksdale.

Indian Mounds, some of them as old as the pyramids are here. The undeveloped Jaketown Mounds near Belzoni date back 3,500 years. Snap a picture from Highway 7. There are also hiking trails and fishing and hunting places and swamps and bayous and rivers and lakes. I can't remember when I first became aware of them. But you will never forget them once you visit them.

IT'S ONLY NATURALTHAT WE KNOW FISHING.

Whether you're a family looking to simply relax and enjoy time fishing on your favorite lake or an avid angler looking for an exciting challenge, Mississippi's waters offer an abundance of diverse, quality fishing statewide. Plan your next fishing trip at MDWFP.com.

See our map of Mississippi State Lakes on the insert between pages 24 and 25.

Island Hopping

UNIQUE RECREATIONAL OPPORTUNITIES AND UNSPOILED BEAUTY AWAIT VISITORS TO MISSISSIPPI'S PRISTINE BARRIER ISLANDS.

BY KELLI BOZEMAN

It was a quiet night on Horn Island—at least until the clouds began collecting over the Gulf of Mexico and the thunder began to shake the sand. The group of campers who had hunkered down along a trail on the island known as "Thru Gap" could only watch in awe as the growing storm moved slowly over the water.

The lightning struck again and again, its intensity made all the more majestic by the starkness of the remote island's setting off the Mississippi Gulf Coast. "The electrical display was absolutely astonishing," says Bob Marsh, one of the campers who witnessed the natural spectacle on that September night in 2011. By the time the sun rose and the storm subsided, one of the group members, photographer Jason Taylor, had captured more than 1,500 images of the unforgettable scene.

To be sure, not every visit to Mississippi's five barrier islands is quite so exciting, but there is always plenty to be awed by—from quartz-sand beaches to glorious sunsets to close calls with colorful birds. This is what draws a growing number of nature lovers to the islands known as Horn, Cat, Petit Bois, and East and West Ship: a connection to the state's seaside environment that simply can't be found on the mainland.

Acclaimed artist Walter Anderson may have been one of the best-known champions of these slivers of sandy terrain. In the last several years of his life, he rowed the 12 miles from his home in Ocean Springs to Horn Island countless times, capturing the flora and fauna of the island's landscape with watercolors and relishing the solitude of his surroundings. He studied the birds and the trees, and he captured his experiences in more than 80 logbooks. "It was an embarrassment of riches," he wrote on one occasion when the beauty of this place especially moved him, "...a concentrated image that nothing could take from me."

Marsh, one of those 2011 lightning watchers and a barrier island enthusiast himself, says he knows just what the late artist meant. "I love nature, and having read The Horn Island Logs of Walter Inglis Anderson several times, I viewed the islands as being mysterious, intriguing and beckoning," Marsh says. "I bought an ocean kayak in 2003 and made my first paddle trip to Horn Island in 2004. I was not disappointed. To me, it was as Walter Anderson had described it, a wilderness paradise."

Marsh was so smitten with Horn Island's challenges and charms that he began making regular trips out to learn more about it. "And then, after Horn, there were more islands to explore," he says. Eventually, Marsh decided to use his experiences to help other would-be island explorers, so he created an online guide to Horn and all of the state's barrier islands. Here, he describes in detail each island's history and modern-day features and offers tips for paddlers and campers.

"I think that all of the islands have seen an increase in 'day campers," says Marsh. "These are people in private boats who go out, spend the day, soak up some sun, relax, fish, read and swim."

Even without a boat of your own, several coastal companies make it easy for anyone to enjoy the barrier islands. West Ship Island is the most popular destination, thanks to the Ship Island Excursions ferries that bring visitors here from Gulfport multiple times each day during the summer and on most days of the spring and fall. For a leisurely day's stay, beach chairs and umbrellas are available on the island, but adventurers might want to reserve a little time to take a ranger-led tour of Fort Massachusetts, a brick-walled fortification built after the War of 1812.

I SURVIVED THE TERRORS OF THE SEA AND SAW THE RED SUN GO DOWN TO COME TO THIS PLACE TO PAINT—ALL NATURE APPRECIATES MY COURAGE AND LOVE."

Overnight camping is not permitted on West Ship, but most of the other islands make great getaways for travelers longing for a little quiet time. Many of the islands are within paddling distance of the mainland, and the small near-shore Round Island can make a convenient rest stop to break up the excursion if necessary. Local paddling companies lead kayak trips to Horn and other islands and are happy to rent boats to visitors who don't have their own. For a less strenuous way to make the trip, several charter boat companies welcome newcomers. The skippers of these boats share firsthand knowledge of the islands during the ride.

Wondering what to do once you're on the islands? Fishing is an easy choice, with flounder, red drum, speckled trout and mullet just a few of the species frequently caught. Bird watching is equally exciting here, since these diverse ecosystems offer ideal habitats for nearly 300 species. The National Park Service's Gulf Islands National Seashore, which encompasses the Mississippi islands as well as some off the Florida coast, offers bird checklists at its Davis Bayou visitor center near downtown Ocean

These lands that Walter Anderson once revered and that a growing number of travelers are discovering will continue to sparkle as jewels of the Gulf for centuries to come.

ISLE TO ISLE

- * HORN ISLAND: "Horn is the classic example and gem of the Mississippi barrier islands," says Marsh. Largest of all the islands, it offers visitors much to explore, from dunes and beaches to massive live oak trees and marshes, plus a shipwreck that dates to the mid-19th century. The fishing is fine here, and campers often report spotting wildlife including ospreys and bald eagles. Walter Anderson's favorite campsites are marked along a trail now named for him.
- PEIIT BOIS: Think of this one as "Horn's little sister," says Marsh, similar to its neighbor but smaller and without the many trees found on Horn. Least accessible, it is also the least visited of all the barrier islands. "One interesting aspect of Petit Bois is that there were no rabbits there as of 2013, whereas Horn has thousands," Marsh notes.
- * WEST SHIP ISLAND: Easiest to access, thanks to the Ship Island Excursions ferries. Once on the island, visitors can enjoy the state's best beaches or tour Fort Massachusetts, a well-preserved brick fort that saw cannon fire during the Civil War. This is the only island where overnight camping is not
- EAST SHIP ISLAND: Once connected to West Ship, this two-mile-long island is now on its own and bare besides its "beautiful beaches, bright sunshine and excellent fishing," Marsh says.
- CAT ISLAND: The westernmost and most ecologically diverse of these islands features an east beach area similar to the other islands' beaches, "but the west two-thirds of Cat is totally different," explains Marsh. "This area was not built up over the ages by drifting sand; it was once part of the Mississippi River delta." The mostly flat land is dotted by lagoons, pines and palmettos, and visitors can explore the remains of a family home site that was established here in the late 1700s. A portion of the island is privately owned.

Mississippian and Nobel Prize Winning author William Faulkner once said, "To understand the world you must first understand a place like Mississippi." Some might suggest that to really understand Mississippi, you must get off the beaten path and see where the back roads take you. Travelers who've taken that approach often tout that they've experienced a raw, unique and truly American experience in the Deep South, filled with great music, warm hospitality and some hearty food. If that's the Mississippi you're looking to experience, choosing a place to stay that's a little bit unconventional might just make your visit to Mississippi as unique as the culture you're sure to experience here.

"To understand the world you must first understand a place like Mississippi."

Starting in the northern most part of the State, in Faulkner's home of Oxford, travelers will find a college town, bursting with energy and liveliness. The historic Square is the center of it all, and the Z Bed and Breakfast is the perfect retreat in the heart of downtown Oxford. The quaint, but up-scale bed and breakfast is located just off the Historic Courthouse Square and a short walk to the University of Mississippi Campus. The hospitality (and the delicious cinnamon rolls) you'll find at the Z will give you a first class taste of a true Mississippi experience.

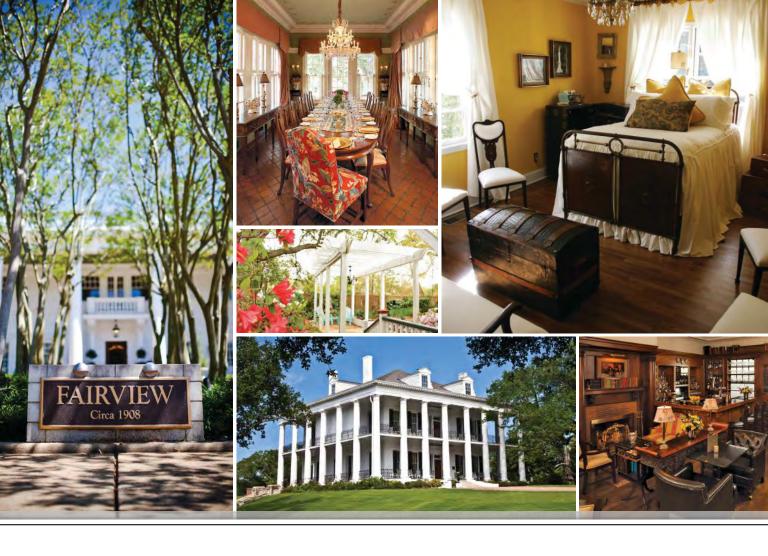

If you are headed to the Mississippi Delta, you'll find these flat lands offer an abundance of unique options for lodging. Clarksdale, birthplace of the blues and home to actor Morgan Freeman's Ground Zero Blues Club, offers many funky and fun alternatives to traditional lodging. It could be argued that Clarksdale is a ground zero for unique lodging. The Lofts at the Five and Dime is a great place to stay with its six lofts above the old Woolworth's Five and Dime in Downtown Clarksdale. The list goes on with funky and fun spots like Squeeze Box, a vacation rental apartment, Delta Digs and Delta Bohemian.

A little further down the road many visitors to Greenwood often find themselves drawn to the Alluvian hotel, where you are sure to find luxury you'd be more likely to expect in a big city, but in this little town, you'll find it with a Southern twist. But, if you're feeling more adventurous and looking to find history, head over to the Tallahatchie Flats. Just three miles outside of Greenwood on the banks of the Tallahatchie River, these converted tenant shacks are inspired by the kinds of shacks that many of the best Blues artists were born in, and certainly provide some authentic Delta–style fun for your getaway. It is music, after all, that draws many to Mississippi and particularly to the Delta. Indianola is the home of B.B. King, and the Blue Biscuit Bungalow, housed in a spacious and refurbished cottage complete with heart pine floors and all the comforts of home, is a great overnight spot for wanting to visit the B.B. King Museum and Delta Interpretive Center and enjoy Indianola.

If you're headed to Jackson, the state's capital, The Fairview Inn is a prime location for seeing the many attractions and enjoying the amenities of the state's largest city. This property is so charming you may not want to leave and won't have to because their new restaurant 1908 Provisions, named for the year the stately home was built, will arouse your senses with mouthwatering California inspired, but Southern rooted creations.

Located less than an hour from Jackson, Vicksburg offers historical style on the banks of the Mississippi River. A little bit Delta and a lot monumental, Vicksburg's National Military Park draws visitors from around the world. Cabins, lodges and bed and breakfasts are all available in Vicksburg for those seeking something out of the ordinary, but Anchuca Bed and Breakfast stands out. A beautiful and luxurious B&B, Anchuca is conveniently located to many of Vicksburg's shops, museums and galleries, and boasts delicious food at Cafe Anchuca. Travelers wanting to experience history in Vicksburg can't go wrong with this historical home.

Further south, visitors find Natchez to be the "South" they've often imagined and read about. Streets lined with gorgeous historical homes with the rolling Mississippi River as a backdrop. Natchez has been called the Bed and Breakfast capital of Mississippi. Many of Natchez's beautiful homes now operate as upscale bed and breakfasts. One such example is Dunleith, where the breakfast alone is worth the trip. Beautiful and updated guest rooms are nestled in this historic property and it's hard to find somewhere that feels more Southern. In a town filled with beautiful homes, why not stay a few nights longer and give them all a try.

Furthest south, in the Coastal region of the state, many visitors to Mississippi's Gulf Coast seek gaming and entertainment at the many casino properties located there. But if you are looking for something else on your visit, head over to Ocean Springs. This artists community offers charm and creativity with a coastal flair and boasts several bed and breakfasts to provide a quaintness to your visit. The Inn at Ocean Springs looks like an artists retreat. With a Southern-style porch where you can relax and recharge your creativity, and a convenient location to the shops, galleries and great restaurants, this is a great way to experience the Mississippi Gulf Coast's slower side.

Mississippi's creativity, history and fun spirit bring you a variety of options when planning your getaway. With a little digging, you can find anything from wonderful upscale hotels to down home shacks converted for travelers. Pack your bags, because there is plenty to see in Mississippi, and as Faulkner said, it may just change the way you view the rest of the world.

MISSISSIPPI: THE RESTAURANTS THAT MATTER

BY SARA CAMP ARNOLD

Hot tamales, threaded with spicy pork, wrapped in cornhusks, tied in bundles of six and sold from roadside Delta shebangs. Catfish, rolled in spiced meal and fried in broiling oil, served from the porch of Taylor Grocery, the Hill Country landmark. Plate lunches from Peggy's in Philadelphia, served on a makeshift buffet, tacked up in the hallway. Greek salads, packed with hunks of feta, stippled with Comeback sauce, served at the Mayflower in Jackson. Biloxi po-boys, stuffed with crab, smothered with cheese and toasted on what looks like a clothes press. The foods of Mississippi are deliriously varied. And so are the restaurants where they are served. Travel the state and you will soon recognize that our restaurants are beacons of ethnic diversity, clubhouses where communities gather and shrines to tenured employees and multigenerational family ownership.

HILLS |

Here on the edge of almost-Appalachia, delicious foods are rooted in Southern Tradition. Slugburgers, which debuted in the early 1900s, grew popular during the Depression. Picture a round slice of meatloaf, made with ground beef and an extender like cracker meal, flattop fried until crispy in a shallow pool of oil. In Corinth, Borrum's Drugstore, doing business since 1865, sells a version. Latham's Hamburger Inn of New Albany also offers a slugburger and Phillips Grocery serves a beefier version in Holly Springs.

Abe's Grill, also in Corinth, serves country favorites like cathead biscuits, layered with patty sausage and scrambled pork brains with sawmill gravy. In the college town of Oxford, Lamar Lounge dishes pit-smoked, whole hog barbecue and stages the best local music. Eight miles south at Taylor Grocery, Lyn Hewlett fries farm-raised catfish fillets and lives by the motto, "Eat or we both starve." Still further south, Buck's One-Stop in Calhoun City applies that same inventive thrift to sweets, serving one of the best caramel cakes in the state.

DELTA |

African Americans, Chinese, Latinos and Lebanese have all made their mark on the Delta's history, culture and foodways. A century or so ago, Mexican farm laborers brought tamales with them. Tamales made for a portable and filling lunch in the cotton fields. Blues legend Robert Johnson sang praises to hot tamales in his classic song, "They're Red Hot." Momand-pop storefronts like the White Front Café in Rosedale, roll, wrap and simmer tamales. Doe's Eat Place in Greenville is known for their tamales. Doe's matriarch Florence Signa has mixed salads in the same wooden bowl for generations. At the Rest Haven in Clarksdale, Chafik Chamoun serves fried chicken from his adopted Mississippi and kibbe from his native Lebanon.

The classic meal at old-guard Delta restaurants is an iceberg salad drenched in anchovy-laced vinaigrette, followed by steak, a brace of shrimp or a whole fish. Over in Greenwood, Lusco's delivers an old-school Delta dining experience, with curtained booths, a bring-your-own bottle policy, sputtering steaks and sweet broiled pompano. Down the street, the Crystal Grill, in business since the 1930s, serves as the Greek-owned Delta standard-bearer, famous for meringue-crowned pies.

COASTAL

From Pascagoula to Bay St. Louis, the Gulf Coast is home to new and old immigrants from Vietnam, Croatia, Italy and elsewhere. Most arrived to staff and grow the seafood industry. Restaurants run the gamut from Bozo's Grocery – a Pascagoula seafood market that specializes in fried shrimp and crab balls, where flip-flops and shorts are customary -- to Mary Mahoney's in Biloxi, where linen drapes the tables and Gulf fish gets topped in lump crabmeat and drenched in butter.

Po-boys are omnipresent here. And no, they're not New Orleans copycats. At Le Bakery in Biloxi, Sue Nguyen serves pho, the Vietnamese rice noodle soup, and banh mi, Vietnamese sandwiches built on French bread. At Rosetti's, the house favorite is the Vancleave Special, a po-boy stuffed with crabmeat and cheese and pressed warm to order. If it's barbecue sandwiches you're after and community you crave, The Shed in Ocean Springs delivers ribs, live music and a clubhouse where all are welcome.

CAPITAL/RIVER

Jackson is the place to go Greek. And the place to dive deep into the soul food roster. Upper-crust dining rooms and humble cafés alike serve food that you might recognize as Southern as well as Greek: broiled Gulf fish, Greek salads and the Thousand Island-meetsremoulade dressing and sauce called Comeback. In 1935, George Kountouris and John Gouras, friends from the island of Patmos, opened the Mayflower Café, now famous for broiled fish. Twelve years later, the Zouboukos brothers established the Elite Restaurant, where the yeast rolls remain justly famous. In the 1950s, Paul Crechale opened his eponymous restaurant, beloved for fried shrimp. Bill Matheos of Bill's Greek Tavern, a favorite of author Eudora Welty, followed a similar Greek-Southern path.

Geno Lee, proprietor of the Big Apple Inn -- doing business on Farish Street since the 1930s -- serves pig-ear sandwiches on slider buns. Bully's Restaurant began serving the city's best soul food in the early 1980s: oxtails, neckbones, meatloaf, macaroni and cheese, rice and gravy, tomatoes and okra -- and three different types of greens each day. To see where old Jackson meets new, Brent's Drugs in the revitalized Fondren neighborhood serves lunches of egg-and-olive sandwiches at the 1960s counter. Here, good food endures. Campbell's Bakery, also in Fondren, has been turning out sugary teacakes since the 1950s.

PINES

The region was built by loggers who arrived to harvest longleaf pines. Towns grew up around the region's sawmills. And so did appetites. Peggy's, a landmark in Philadelphia, is a throwback to the home kitchens that once turned out plate lunches to blue-collar workers. For decades, Peggy's has offered up a daily lunch buffet in a house just a few blocks off Philadelphia's main drag. Diners serve themselves from a table loaded with such simple country favorites as fried chicken, black-eyed peas, mashed potatoes, okra and coleslaw. Folks from all walks of life rub elbows and pass the cornbread at communal tables. When they finish, they're on the honor system to leave cash in a basket by the door.

Helen's Kitchen in Columbus is another bastion of home-cooked comfort food, Owner/cook Helen Karriem set up shop in 1988 and serves a rotating variety of daily lunch specials in a meat-and-two format. Her regular offerings include meat loaf, smothered pork chops, salmon croquettes, greens, rice and gravy and combread dressing. For dessert, peach cobbler is a favorite,

Beyond the card tables, Mississippi's world-class casino resorts offer unique amenities that ensure a winning experience.

Tug on the handle, and the reels rotate in a colorful kaleidoscope of excitement. At the hottest slot machines, some of which offer progressive payouts that can climb to the millions, the thrill of what could be is what keeps players coming back. But visitors need only look beyond the casino floor to find that there's much more to the allure of Mississippi's gaming resorts. From the Delta to the Gulf Coast, these destinations offer everything from serene spa treatments and championship golf courses to divine dining spots and A-list entertainment venues.

Here's a cheat sheet to the amenities that will have every visitor feeling like a high-rolling VIP.

Horseshoe, Tunica | horseshoetunica.com

A full day of action at the Horseshoe might start with a bang at Willows Sporting Clays and Hunting Center, where guests can test their aim at 14 automated shooting stations and a rifle and pistol shooting range. Back at the resort, the spa and fitness center features a steam room, sauna, all the essential exercise equipment, plus massages and facials are available by appointment. Once you're relaxed and revived, savor a prime-time treat at Jack Binion's Steak House from chef John Besh. But the fun's not quite done yet; end the evening at the onsite Bluesville Showcase Nightclub, which regularly draws top entertainers for unforgettable concerts.

Hollywood Casino, Tunica | hollywoodcasinotunica.com

The Tinseltown theme here means every guest can feel like a star, whether dining at Fairbanks Steakhouse and the Celebrity Grill or beating the heat at the indoor pool. Guests also enjoy priority tee times at the nearby Tunica National Golf and Tennis and River Bend Links. And it's only fitting that the casino houses one of the area's largest authentic collections of movie memorabilia, from the Batmobile and the Back to the Future DeLorean to a six-ton scale model of the Titanic.

Bally's Casino, Tunica | ballystunica.com

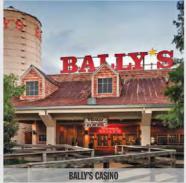

Prepare for a passage back in time at Bally's, with its 19th-century rustic décor straight out of Delta farm country. The immersive atmosphere makes guests immediately feel at home, with charming touches including a beamed ceiling and a casual restaurant housed inside a silo. Another onsite eatery, known for its generous portions of Southern favorites and simply called "The Barn," might inspire some to live a little with its slogan, "It ain't health food!"

Gold Strike, Tunica | goldstrikemississippi.com

This MGM resort has all the style and substance you'd expect from the Vegas heavyweight brand, but with its own Southern vibe. The heated pool and oversized Jacuzzi are surrounded by rugged rocks that give the feel of a secluded hideaway, while the Golden Reflections Spa offers tasty temptations like a sugar body polish and chocolate salt scrub. Musical greats like B.B. King and Loretta Lynn have been known to grace the stage at the onsite Millennium Theatre, while Stage2 offers a more intimate musical experience. Satisfy your taste buds with a late-night stop at the Chicago Steakhouse, known for its Kobe-style burger, lamb chops and more.

Trop Casino, Greenville | tropgreenville.com

Riverboat rollicking meets downtown Delta in Greenville's Trop Casino, which was recently redesigned to give gaming guests a more inviting experience. Big Waters Grille, the sizzling onsite restaurant, draws locals and visitors with its home-style favorites like fried catfish and the popular Big Waters Burger. Making a weekend of it is easy with the affiliated nearby Greenville Inn & Suites, which offers boutique-style hotel amenities and a courtyard restaurant and lounge.

Pearl River Resort, Choctaw | pearlriverresort.com

Two are better than one at Pearl River Resort, which brings together the Golden Moon and Silver Star hotels and casinos in one getaway-worthy location. That means guests can explore no less than nine different restaurants and two award-winning golf courses at Dancing Rabbit Golf Club. The spa is known for its customized exotic treatments and aromatherapy, which may be just the thing after an exciting evening at the tables. Even the youngest visitors aren't forgotten here; Geyser Falls Water Theme Park offers 23 acres of slides, splashes and sun for the whole family.

Palace Casino Resort, Biloxi | palacecasinoresort.com

Luxury is the name of the game at the Palace, where the amazing water views are only rivaled by the stellar amenities, like VIP check-in, newly renovated rooms and suites and poolside cabanas. Golfers will be awed by the Preserve Golf Club, its 18 holes designed by U.S. Open champ Jerry Pate in the midst of a breathtaking nature preserve. The in-house Pure Spa offers signature treatments like red wine reservatrol anti-aging facials and magnetic reflexology along with a full array of massage, facial and exfoliating indulgences. If all the pampering has you working up an appetite, try Mignon's Steaks & Seafood, winner of awards from both Wine Enthusiast and Wine Spectator magazines. And here's a breath of fresh air: the Palace is the Mississippi Gulf Coast's only smoke-free casino.

Beau Rivage, Biloxi | beaurivage.com

Business is booming at the Beau, and has the staff to give you plenty of personalized attention for guests, from the award-winning spa with its signature Skin Authority treatments to the Tom Fazio-designed Fallen Oak golf course. Private poolside cabanas with concierge service, more than a half-dozen big-city -style restaurants and a theater that attracts top-name entertainers only add to the allure. All those elements combine to explain why <code>Condé Nast Traveler</code> and <code>Travel + Leisure</code> have both called the Beau Rivage one of the nation's top resorts.

Harrah's Gulf Coast, Biloxi | caesars.com/harrahsgulfcoast

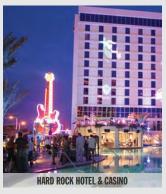

This redesigned resort welcomes visitors with new attractions including a fine-dining restaurant by celebrity chef Kelly English, hotel room upgrades and a new boardwalk and "great lawn" outdoor entertainment venue. But fans of the former Grand Casino need not worry; popular features like the Grand Bear golf course, designed by Jack Nicklaus and known as one of the South's best courses, and Bellissimo Spa, a massage mecca that also offers luxuries like water therapy and sugar cane crystal rubs, are still alive and well.

Hard Rock Hotel & Casino, Biloxi | hardrockbiloxi.com

Music is the key to a memorable stay at the Hard Rock. When guests check in, they get a free music download from a custom playlist, but for a more interactive experience, real Fender guitars—complete with amps and headphones—are available on loan from the front desk. Accommodation options like cabana suites with private pool-view balconies might have visitors never wanting to leave their rooms, but there's much more to explore, from the Gulf-facing pool with its swim-up bar to the Rock Spa, which offers such exhilarating treatments as warm and cool stone massages and Caribbean-inspired seaweed body masques.

Trace the roots of one of the South's most extraordinary musical exports. _____ Mississippi Blues Trail. Markers reveal some of the genre's pioneers on the Mississippi Blues Trail. Markers reveal some of the most fascinating

In the shadows of Delta silos in the early days of the 20th century, a new form of music was born. Pure, powerful and unpretentious, this new sound—distinctive with its melancholic melodies and unique chord progressions—captured the emotions of the people and quickly spread to capture the minds of music lovers around the country.

Today, travelers can walk in the footsteps of the genre's pioneers on the Mississippi Blues Trail. Markers reveal some of the most fascinating spots in blues history, from the Bolton birthplace of Charley Patton and the street in Cleveland where Howlin' Wolf once played for pennies, to the gravesite of legendary guitarist Robert Johnson. Markers continue to be added around the state, preserving the memories of these musical trailblazers on an ever-growing path that fans from all over the globe now follow.

Texas and Tennessee tend to get all the credit, but country music wouldn't be what it is today without the musical minds of Mississippi. It was right here, in fact, that the genre got its start, in the melodymaking hands of a Meridian native named Jimmie Rodgers. Called by the Country Music Hall of Fame "the man who started it all," Rodgers spun a career on the railroad into the stuff of world-famous songs by Rodgers paved the way for a host of barrier-breaking artists, from Delta-born African-American singer Charlie Pride and crossover star Bobbie Gentry to hairdresser-turned-household name Tammy Wynette and contemporary hit-maker Faith Hill. The Mississippi Country Music Trail puts the birthplaces and stomping grounds of these legends literally on the map, and a walk in their shoes is one you won't soon forget.

The Mississippi Freedom Trail commemorates the struggles Half a century later, state leaders launched the Mississippi Freedom of brave Mississippians to enjoy racial equality. _

The buses moved slowly into Jackson on that hot day in May 1961, filled with young activists from around the country hoping to make a difference for African-Americans who lacked many basic rights. They were called Freedom Riders, but true freedom came for the African- white woman before being murdered. Perhaps the pinnacle of the tour American citizens they stood beside only after a bitter battle marked by is the late Medgar Evers' Jackson home. assassinations, harassment and suffering.

Culinary and literary landmarks make for a soul-nourishing And then there are the Magnolia State's stops on the Southern Literary odyssey. .

Some of the most memorable Mississippi pathways aren't marked by roadside signs. Take the state's Culinary Trail, which draws travelers to destinations that have helped define longtime food traditions. Learn why tamales were an integral part of life in the Delta for decades, and why diners still "comeback" for a special sauce first served at a Jackson restaurant. From the Vicksburg spot where Coca-Cola was bottled for the first time to Mary Mahoney's Old French House restaurant, housed in a 1737 home in Biloxi, this trail offers the inside scoop on many of These cultural gems are embedded into the evolving landscape of the most unique and most delicious elements of Mississippi history.

Trail, celebrating some of the greatest American writers and the works they created. This wild ride takes literature lovers from Rowan Oak, the Oxford home of William Faulkner, to Tennessee Williams' former haunts in Columbus and Clarksdale. In Greenville, you'll see the spots Walker Percy and Shelby Foote favored as young friends. Jackson serves as lifelong literary inspiration for Eudora Welty, and her home is now a museum that offers an intimate glimpse of the way she lived until her death in 2001.

ROAD TRIPPIN'

Make time to unwind with a leisurely drive down two of America's most scenic byways.

= By Kelli Bozeman =

They say getting there is half the fun, but in a few special cases, the journey itself is the destination. Think Route 66 or California's Pacific Coast Highway. Mississippi is in the enviable position of having two such iconic roadways: the ancient path now known as the Natchez Trace Parkway and Highway 61, also known as the "Blues Highway" or the "Great River Road."

Natchez Trace Parkway

Thousands of years ago, Native Americans hiked a dirt trail that stretched diagonally across what is now Mississippi and up into Tennessee. Today travelers along this route see a paved parkway in its place, but the scenery is surprisingly similar; dense forests, cypress swamps, abundant wildlife and a stillness that belies the bustle of the cities that have cropped up beyond this linear park's borders. "The variety of natural and cultural resources that can be found along the Parkway are staggering," says Terry Wildy, chief of interpretation and partnerships for the Natchez Trace Parkway, which is part of the National Park Service.

Nature lovers will be enchanted by the sights along the Trace. Here, you'll find fields of wildflowers that paint the roadside yellow and red each spring, hardwood forests that show their colors in autumn and more than 200 species of mammals, birds, reptiles and amphibians. Such unspoiled beauty has made the Trace the eighth most popular unit of the National Park System, with more than six million visitors in 2013. Even as society speeds up, there's something almost mystical about this ancient road that continues to draw travelers who are ready to slow down a bit.

"National parks like the Natchez Trace Parkway provide access to some of the most important stories of the American people, stories which we as a nation have found worthy of protecting for future generations," Wildy says. "Such stories contain universal concepts—things that all visitors can relate to."

For more on the Natchez Trace, see nps.gov/natr.

Highway 61

What makes this road that winds along the Mississippi River so special? Just ask the dozens of blues musicians—and folk superstar Bob Dylan—who all found it worthy of writing songs about. Officially designated a National Scenic Byway, Mississippi's portion of U.S. Highway 61 stretches south from the outskirts of Memphis through the Delta region down to the town of Woodville before crossing into Louisiana. This 1,400-mile highway, known nationally as the Great River Road, actually runs from Minnesota to New Orleans, but it is the segment secured by the Magnolia State's borders that draws visitors from around the world. Here, the river has broken free of its banks so many times that the land is as fertile as you will find, plum for planting cotton or rice. This Delta soil has been a source of riches, from the finery of plantations to the rise of musical legends and culinary treasures.

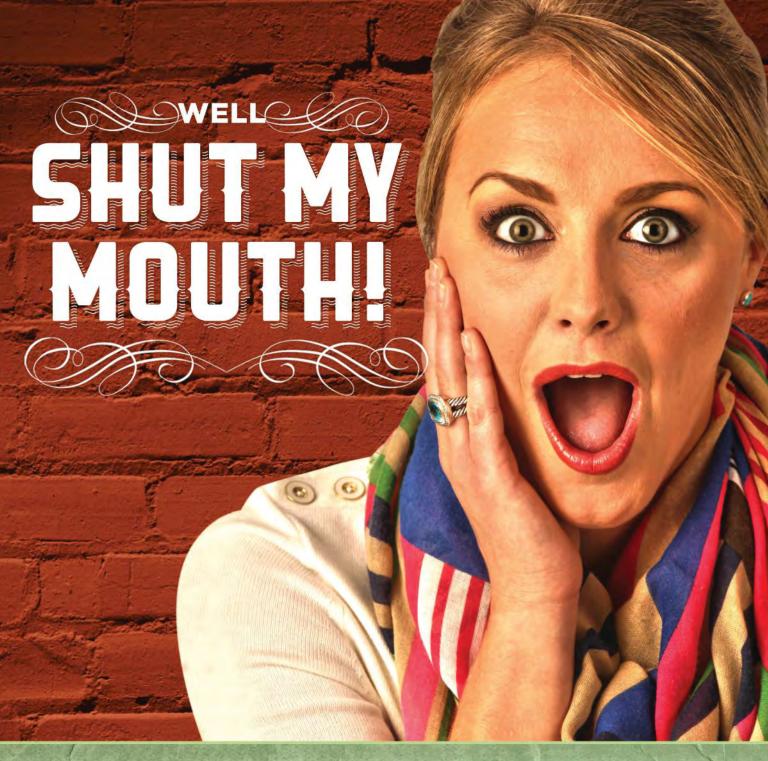

"This region once had the nation's highest concentration of millionaires," says Bill Seratt, president of the community coalition for Mississippi's Great River Road. "Today the treasures of the Great River Road are here for everyone to enjoy."

Highlights of the highway range from the world-famous to the obscure. Travelers can stand at the Clarksdale crossroads where blues legend Robert Johnson was said to have sold his soul to the Devil, then have lunch at Ground Zero Blues Club, the restaurant and blues club owned by Oscar winner Morgan Freeman and local mayor and attorney, Bill Luckett. In less than an hour, you can go from a Natchez plantation to the very Vicksburg spot where one of the most important battles of the Civil War was fought. For a taste of rugged beauty, a hike beside the waterfalls at the Clark Creek Natural Area near the highway's southernmost Mississippi town, Woodville, is a must.

Seratt adds, "Each of our historic communities has such unique character that there's always something new—or should I say wonderfully old and new—just up ahead."

MEET US AT ECPOSSROADS

It's a deal that's hard to pass up. We can't promise you'll be transformed into a guitar legend, but we're pretty sure you'll leave a changed person. This place gave Tennessee Williams plenty of material based on his early life here, and music legends like Conway Twitty, Muddy Waters, and Sam Cooke didn't come from some ordinary place. The literary and music history sets the stage for good food and lots of events. Come visit and see what sets us apart. And remember, when you get to the Crossroads, you're here.

It's more than a river. It's a story.

An itinerary is a good start. But the real trip begins when you leave it by the wayside. Mississippi is alive. Let it grab you. The music. The food. The laughter. The peace. When you get lost in the moment, you find much more. And you'll take it with you forever.
